Like many things in life, effective leadership will never be an exact formula; but nor should it feel mysterious or unattainable. Being a good leader is about striking the balance between task and relationship by using empathy, transparency, clear communication, humility and presence. Many good clinicians find themselves in leadership positions in healthcare, community and human services as a natural progression in their career. However, leadership in these sectors requires a different set of skills from clinical work. Join us for a full day intensive and immersive workshop drawing on evidence and research-based leadership strategies. You will learn how to apply knowledge into practice, and walk away feeling empowered as a leader - adding practical skills to your toolkit that you can implement straight away. Who is this workshop for? Senior Clinicians Team Leaders Casework Managers Middle Managers Emerging leaders
