Australia's digital health system is rapidly growing and evolving and, as part of that evolution, the Australian Digital Health Agency is working closely with Services Australia, software developers, and healthcare organisations to implement enhancements to the National Authentication Service for Health (NASH). These enhancements will provide enhanced security protection for healthcare information and reduce the need for healthcare organisations to manage multiple certificates.

To provide stronger protection NASH SHA-1 certificates are being replaced by NASH SHA-2 certificates and connections to digital health services must transition to NASH SHA-2 certificates. As we are actively working towards the progressive release of NASH SHA-2 certificates in September 2021, the Agency is hosting a webinar for stakeholders responsible for supporting healthcare providers
